- 4. There was no shipbuilding activities in evidence that I could see and no USSR naval graft in the harbor except for pilot vessels. USSR soldiers and police were noticeably in the background and most of the port and security activity was conducted under the supervision of Polish Communists. I got the impression that these Polish Communists were doing their best to be overly harsh in order to impress the USSR officers.
- 5. When our ship was ready to sail, the Communists conducted the same intensive and minute search they had conducted upon our arrival. This time it lasted about four hours. At the conclusion of the search the passports were returned to us and our vessel was given clearance. It certainly looked as though they didn't trust the pilot that came aboard. He was accompanied by two armed soldiers who remained on the bridge with the pilot at all times. After the vessel was clear of the harbor the pilot boat came alongside and the pilot was the first to leave the vessel and enter the pilot boat. He was followed immediately by the two armed soldiers. It was obvious that no chance was given for the pilot to try to leave Gydnia.
- 6. Loading operations were conducted satisfactorily and speedily but what galled us the most, and an official protestwas made against it, was having four stevedoring crews standing by while a five hour search was made prior to the starting of unloading operations. The agent we complained to, I do not recall his name, informed us that this was one of the ways the port officials used to obtain extra money for dock workers and officials. We were led to believe that although the ship must pay for the waiting time the workers who are waiting do not actually get the money.
